I'm still waiting too. I asked a few weeks ago and was told they were waiting to be paid. The lawyer told me in September that he was approving the invoices, so either he didn't or mastronardi hasn't paid the lawyers or the lawyers haven't paid trews... Guess it's time to ask again. This is why we should ask for a $10k retainer to be held. We would've been paid by now...

Hope to see you at PAG and down a tequila or three.

I'm in long beach now, about to head home after tri-society meeting. Not very exciting...

Dear Scott and Rajeev,

Just checking in to see if you might feel ready to start on the Legume Genetics and Genomics book. It seems to me that this would be very timely, and we'd really like to have such a book in the series, especially with you guys as editors.

Both Eric and I will be at PAG, so if that is a good time to discuss, we'll be available.

Rajeev and Scott,
It's great that you're ready to take on a legume
book. Just as a reminder about the purpose and nature of the series, I
forward the original
invitation to you
that is at the bottom
of this string from 2010. Since that time, we've published books on Rice, Papaya and
the Saccharinae.
The latter is one of the best books in the series, so it's useful to have a look at it (the book, not just the Table of Contents - Eric can send you a copy) as a guide for breadth, depth and quality. A key point is to include genetics, not just genomics.

Although a few books in the series are strictly genomics, the best books, and the intent of the series is to include genetic diversity, resources, etc.

The proposal form that Eric sent you doesn't have to be dealt with until I've approved your ToC - we may have to go back and forth on that a bit, so don't worry about the book proposal form yet. (In fact, I hope Eric's office can enter much of the information for you so you don't have to deal with all of it.)

Also, we should mention that Gary Stacey is doing a second volume of the Soybean book. This shouldn't be a major problem, but there could be some overlap with your authors, so you might want to coordinate with Gary via Eric. Gary told me that he plans to use about 80% of the authors

from the first edition and replace
others whose
chapters he wasn't happy with. He may also add some
chapters.
