

From: Scott Allen Jackson
To: rajeev varshney
Cc: Ribaut, Jean-Marcel \(GCP\); Peggy Ozias-Akins; Jeremy Schmutz; Ehlers, Jeff \(GCP\); Deborah Powell
Subject: Re: cost for international participants
Date: Thursday, November 20, 2014 8:34:51 AM

Rajeev, I'm not sure how to do graded discounts as there probably won't be that many international students. I do like the idea of those that can afford it to pay full while those that are from developing countries and unable to do so, have a reduced rate. The question is how to distinguish between those?

scott

On Nov 19, 2014, at 10:23 PM, Varshney, Rajeev (ICRISAT-IN) <R.K.Varshney@CGIAR.ORG> wrote:

Thanks everyone.

One possibility is to attract students from developing country is to have discount in different categories like 25% discount- 10 students, 50% discount for 5 students, 100% discount for 10 students and we ask students to show support towards travel from their/ other organizations.

On the other hand, if some speakers (lets ask them) can cover their expenses from their projects (I can do this for myself!), we can use those resources also to support travel of some young scientists from developing countries.

Many thanks and kind regards

Rajeev

On Nov 20, 2014, at 12:07 AM, Ribaut, Jean-Marcel (GCP) <J.RIBAUT@CGIAR.ORG> wrote:

I really support Scott's proposal, especially if we want to attract people from developing countries. Any thoughts for students from developing countries?

Best,

JM

On 11/19/14 11:58 AM, "Scott Allen Jackson" <sjackson@uga.edu> wrote:

Deborah et al.,

We have overlooked the cost for the international participants. I think they should be at the student price too, so it is not prohibitive for the. Hoepfully, we can offset these numbers with fund raising. I think for folks for developing countries that the full price will be too expensive. Thoughts?

Copying our international organizers here too.

scott