Hi Heath,

I'd be happy to speak with Britt. Her budget might not stretch to accommodate a visit to Australia, but the offer is there. Obviously we could chat via Skype.

Cheers

Paul

Hi all,

New Media Contact: I spent some time Friday in an interview with Britt Wray, who has recently completed a book project on de-extinction where she learned about the GBIRD partnership's work. She's currently working on a pitch for a N. American broadcast TV series opportunity focused on synthetic biology and I sense that she thinks there's an episode or two that could focus on our collective efforts. She says that the production company she's working with would be targeting networks like Discovery or National Geographic and they would be focused on balanced, yet entertaining, reporting on the subject...she says they are not interested in sensationalized, tabloid/reality-type broadcast opportunities. Given what I could glean from her approach, product history, and personal approach this seems like a potentially opportunity we may want to cautiously engage in...depending on the producers, format, editorial influence we could have. You can read her bio here: <http://www.brittwrap.com/about-2/>

Action Item: Britt asked specifically if there were filming opportunities in the various research partners' laboratories. I promised that I would inquire and get back to her. Research University Leads & your PIOs...would you be willing to host a film crew for interviews and filming of your laboratories? Thanks and please advise.

If anyone else is keen to speak with her, she's open to having further discussions. Her email signature follows:
